

The Greensburg Story

On May 4, 2007, a massive tornado leveled Greensburg, Kansas, destroying 95% of the town and leaving a path of devastation nearly 2 miles wide. Eleven of the town's 1,400 residents died in the disaster. In their communal search for meaning in the days that followed this catastrophe the people of Greensburg individually and collectively agreed to rebuild their town as one of the greenest in the country.

The 10-turbine Greensburg Wind Farm will create significant economic and environmental benefits for the town as the community continues to rebuild. The wind farm will generate enough energy to power 4,000 buildings – enough electricity for every home, business, and municipal facility in Greensburg.
